

Abstract

The invention relates to a method for application of the main insulation to conductor bars, in particular conductor bars for stator windings, with the conductor bars having a rectangular cross section. The method comprises the following steps: connection of the individual conductor bars to form a quasi-infinite conductor bar with a rectangular cross section; sheathing of the quasi-infinite, rectangular conductor bar with main insulation; cutting out or detaching of the unusable connecting points.